What is tort reform...really?

When you hear the words "tort reform," replace them—every time—with the following: "My family and I will lose our legal right to sue wrongdoers in court for harm that we experience."

It's a mouthful, but it's true.

Tort, or legal, "reform" is not "reform" at all. It's an excuse that lawmakers use to try to take away many of the legal rights of American families in order to subsidize corporate wrongdoers, including the manufacturing, asbestos, pharmaceutical, tobacco, and insurance industries, among others.

These powerful and wealthy corporate interests don't want to be held accountable—it's bad for their bottom lines—and some politicians are eager to help them.

Lawmakers are discussing "reforms" that, if enacted into law, will adversely affect medical malpractice victims, injured workers under Workers' Compensation, vehicle accident sufferers, people harmed by defective products, and many others who are injured by other wrongdoers. Tort "reform" will simply make it harder for the victims that the system is really supposed to protect to obtain justice and compensation for the harm done to them.

America's nursing CRISIS

The nation has too few nurses. Hospitals are actively recruiting overseas and offering substantial employment bonuses to those nurses who come to work for them.

Because of this nursing-care shortage, many health-care professionals fear that the quality of care is suffering. According to USA Today, 32 percent of Americans fear for their safety in U.S. hospitals because too few nurses are assigned to care for too many patients in general and specialty units.

Some hospitals are closing critical-care beds because there are not enough nurses to provide attention, and many parents fear babies and children are at risk at understaffed health centers. Some nurses who are admitted to hospitals for their own health-care needs actually hire their own private nurses so that they receive medications, therapies, and other attention correctly and at the right time.

One nursing incident

After a child suffered brain damage and quadriplegia requiring 24-hour care, his parents filed suit against the hospital. A jury's verdict provided an award to the child because jurors were convinced that nurses failed to monitor the mother's progress in a timely fashion and report fetal distress to the attending physician.

STOP CHECK FRAUD

You can shield yourself against check fraud by taking some simple steps.

- Use initials instead of your first and middle names when you order checks from your bank. Check thieves will be less confident about endorsing them.
- Shred credit-card and other receipts that go in the trash.
- Write only the last four numbers of your account on any check to pay your credit-card bill. No one can copy your account number.
- Seal checks in security mailer envelopes.
- Review cancelled checks and statements during reconciliation to look for alterations or inappropriate transactions.
- Protect deposit slips since thieves can make bad-check deposits and take cash back.
- Patronize retailers that use fingerprints or electronic check-fraud software systems.

- Report check fraud to financial institutions and law enforcement immediately.
- Obtain victim assistance or legal counsel if fraud leads to emotional problems or serious financial loss.

Brokerage firm "Full disclosure"

In 2002, investment brokerage giant Merrill Lynch paid $100 million to the State of New York to settle a case alleging that it had defrauded its retail brokerage customers. New York showed that while the firm's analysts were recommending misleading "buy" recommendations to its retail customers, the same analysts were sneering at these investments in internal e-mails and other communications.

What's the lesson from this for the average retail investment customer?

- Consider investment decisions very carefully. Do the proper amount of homework to verify analyst recommendations.
- Understand that some brokerages make more money through stock-and-bond underwriting than through stock sales to retail customers. As a result, some analyst recommendations may be tools to gain highly profitable investment-banking business.
- Be aware of consumers' rights. Investment firms and brokers have "a duty of due care" to disclose all material facts about investment recommendations and to never lie to customers.
- Understand that federal laws and recent decisions have diminished investors' rights to recover.

Municipal bond recommendation

Even big investors who do their homework can fall for investment misrepresentations. When municipal bonds defaulted, several mutual fund companies that invested millions in apartment building renovations sued a stock brokerage firm, charging that the brokers intentionally misstated the occupancy levels and conditions of the buildings. A jury awarded significant compensation for damages as well as prejudgment interest costs and fees.

Profiles in

FAMILY BRAVERY

One reason why defective products seem to go undetected for a long time is that victims often settle prior to trial and, as part of the settlement, agree never to talk about the products' deficiencies.

A family that lost its young son in a vacation accident deserves special mention for its bravery in sharing information about a defective elevator. The inn where the family stayed had an old, two-story elevator with an outer door and inner folding gate separated by a seven-and-a-half-inch gap. The family's son was crushed to death after being trapped in the gap.

When the family planned to sue the inn and the elevator manufacturer for their loss, they learned from their lawyer's investigation that several other children had died in similar elevators. Motivated by the loss of their son, they promised to do all they could to prevent other children from being hurt or killed as a result of dangerous elevators.

The case was resolved, but only after the parents insisted that they would not settle until the elevator company agreed not only to make the necessary technical changes to protect riders, but also to publicize the hazard so other children would not be harmed in elevators.

DUI Q & A

A conviction for driving under the influence of Alcohol, a controlled substance, or a prescribed or over-the-counter medication is serious.

Q: What are some possible outcomes of DUI?

A: Drivers can lose their driver's licenses, have difficulty obtaining auto insurance, or even lose their vehicles to impoundment, among others.

Q: What's the difference between suspension and revocation of a driver's license?

A: A judge can order a temporary DUI suspension for 90 days or six months. Judges can also revoke driver's licenses indefinitely in serious cases or repeat-offender incidents.

Q: What happens to drivers who get caught driving while their license is suspended or revoked?

A: Judges can send them to jail, exact large fines, or sentence them to significant community service for this very serious offense.

Q: What help can a lawyer provide for DUI offenses?

A: The best counsel is to never commit DUI. Lawyers can investigate matters helpful in preparing a defense to obtain alternate punishment, minimize an outcome, or obtain a dismissal.

Mandatory arbitration

More and more businesses are adding mandatory arbitration clauses to the fine print of documents they require consumers and employees to sign. They claim that avoiding going to court saves everyone time and money.

In reality, mandatory arbitration bypasses everyone's rights to seek remedies through the courts, which leaves consumers and employees not only unprotected against wrongdoing, but also offers little recourse in disagreements. What's wrong with them? They can be dreadfully unfair and are not bound by state or federal laws. Further, although corporations pay costs to industry-insider arbitrators, consumers may have to pay thousands in legal fees and are restricted on the evidence they can bring to arbitration.

Service contract

An appeals court invalidated a binding arbitration agreement that a long-distance telephone-service provider required its subscribers to sign. The court said the "take-it-or-leave-it" service contract was "unconscionable" because it did not give consumers a meaningful choice to negotiate, modify, or waive fees or terms and conditions.
